An English Heritage: Nativism, Language and History in the Work of Four Post-war Poets

Course Organiser: Professor James Loxley

This course will explore the work of four post-war English poets in relation to their shared concerns both with Englishness and with arguments concerning the nature of distinctively ‘English’ poetic traditions. It will focus on works by the four poets in which these issues are raised as matters of style, language and theme, and will also address those works through the critical and other controversies to which they have given rise. What, for example, does it mean for these poets to write about place, and the history of place? How do they write about belonging, and ideas of home? How do they relate such questions to broader or grander or more abstract ideas of nation, and national tradition? These four poets are all associated strongly with locales some distance, literal and otherwise, from the English and British capital – so how does Englishness look from here?

Semester One Option Course

Cities of Literature: Metropolitan Modernities

Course Organiser: Dr Simon Cooke and Dr David Farrier

Course Outline
This team-taught course will introduce students to the various ways in which cities around the world have been imagined, experience and represented. Covering cities prominent in Western modernist arts and literature (London, Paris, New York) as well as postcolonial cities (Johannesburg, Fort de France) and imagined cities (Calvino’s Venice), the course will give a sense of the diverse ways in which expressions of modernity are intimately linked to the idea and the experience of the city. Beginning with Walter Benjamin’s explorations of walking in the city, the course will consider such key figures as the flaneur, the outsider, the migrant, the detective, and the criminal, while key themes will include psychogeography, dystopian cities, and the city as text, as archive, as spectral, and as divided. Primary literary texts – from Virginia Woolf to Virginia Woolf, Raymond Chandler to W.G. Sebald – will be supplemented by film screenings (tbc) and visual material.

Seminar Schedule

Contemporary American Fiction

Course Organiser:  Dr Kenneth Millard

This course provides an introduction to the most exciting and innovative fiction of the contemporary United States. By studying in close detail the novels of nine radically different writers, the course interrogates the very idea of what it means to be ‘American’ in a contemporary or postmodern society. Are there common themes which make each of these writers American, or does a close examination of these novels tend to explode the very idea of a common national identity? What particular interpretative paradigms (postmodernity, multiculturalism) can we bring to bear on contemporary novels that will best explain their value and significance? What is the relationship between any recent novel’s social politics (that American desire for cultural recognition and inclusion), and the issue of its aesthetic merit? How do we assess a recent novel’s aesthetic qualities?

This course is, partly, an opportunity for students to develop their own critical responses to recent fiction, in the absence of an established body of secondary writing.

Provisional Seminar Schedule

Week 1  Theories of the contemporary: postmodernism and identity politics.
Week 2  E. L. Doctorow, Ragtime.
Week 3  Don DeLillo, White Noise.
Week 4  Bobbie Ann Mason, In Country.
Week 5  Marilynne Robinson, Housekeeping.

Week 10  Ron Hansen, Desperadoes.
Week 11  Jeffery Eugenides, The Virgin Suicides.

Secondary Texts

Hilfer, T. American Fiction Since 1940.
Nicol, B. Postmodernism and the Contemporary Novel, 2002.
The literature of the Anglophone world outside the British Isles is extraordinarily rich and diverse, and can be productively considered through the lens of postcolonial theory, a body of thought that is attentive to the ways literary production is inflected by historical, geographical and cultural factors resulting from the aftereffects of imperialism. Through a selection of literary texts and films by African, Australian, Canadian, Caribbean, Indian and English authors, we will explore how those living with the legacies of colonialism used their work to engage with this history, and how their texts ‘write back’ to the canon of English literature, problematising its representational strategies and asking us to reconsider how, and why, literary value is assigned. The course is divided into three broad themes – colonial encounters, indigenous voices and historical legacies – and will cover topics including diaspora, hybridity, orality, gender, ‘race’, resistance, and national identity. As we go, we will continue to interrogate the concept of the postcolonial. What are its limitations? What does it obscure? And how useful is it as an analytical category for studying literature?

Decolonization and the Novel

Course Organiser: Dr Aaron Kelly

This course facilitates a critical engagement with the novel's role in decolonization struggles and in particular traces the politics of writing in English for an international range of novelists with regard to specific dynamics in Africa, and then the Caribbean and ultimately contemporary Britain itself. The debilitating and enablements of writing in the language of one's supposed master will be considered. Attention will be given to the social and ideological work undertaken by the novel in its history as a form, as well as to its usage in these decolonizing contexts. The course will also provide a theoretical analysis of key concepts in postcolonial criticism such as hybridity in gauging whether such positions are positive or negative conditions. In addition to affirming resistances within colonies themselves the course also concludes with an analysis of diasporic writing within Britain itself as voices from those former colonies begin to articulate themselves from the imperial metropoles or centres. The course will also question whether the idea of postcoloniality is itself a fiction in the context of the neo-imperialism of the global market and will trace the ambivalences that key writers harbour about moments of supposed national liberation. In resisting a stark binary between colonizer and colonized, the course considers the development of subaltern studies and addresses a series of displacements concerning race, ethnicity, gender and class and discusses how such interstices complicate one another yet also provide the terrain upon which oppositional and properly emancipatory identities may be constructed.

- Film Screening, Monday 3pm – 5pm
- Lecture, Tuesday 12pm – 1pm
- Seminar, Tuesday 2pm – 3pm

Film Criticism and Analysis [CLLC10002] will introduce students to the interpretation of contemporary cinema through a consideration of the ways in which film style influences the meaning of any individual film. The course will also consider the history and development of film criticism and will present various theoretical and philosophical approaches to the study of film.

This course is open to year 4 Honours students in the School of Literatures, Languages and Cultures who are interested in film (except DELC joint degree students). No prior film study is necessary but if you love cinema and are keen on engaging seriously with its study, then Film Criticism and Analysis will give you the opportunity to learn to think and write about film in more depth.

The course will survey a broad range of film genres including contemporary popular film as well as art house cinema. At least 50% of films screened will be in English while any non-English language films will be subtitled. Delivery will be in English.

Assessment:

Literature and the Great War

Course Organiser: Professor Randall Stevenson

The Great War has settled into a familiar form in later imagination, based substantially on views of ‘the horror of the trenches’ drawn from poetry, Wilfred Owen’s particularly. This course aims to revisit these views, not necessarily challenging them but looking more closely at the evidence concerned. This will involve exploring an extended range of war poetry, along with an unusually wide range of war narratives (dramatic in one instance) – often less read or less valued in assessments of the period. A question at every stage will be about how imagination shapes and encounters the most violent and intolerable of experiences, and how – or if – these can be effectively contained and communicated in literature, or even in language at all.

Provisional Seminar Schedule/Primary Texts

1) Selected texts to be provided in class + Poetry by Rupert Brooke & others*

3) Rebecca West The Return of the Soldier (1918) + Poetry by Edward Thomas

4) Max Plowman A Subaltern on the Somme (1927) + Poetry by Ivor Gurney

5) Edmund Blunden, Undertones of War (1928) + Poetry by Edmund Blunden

6) Erich Maria Remarque All Quiet on the Western Front (1929)+ Poetry by Wilfred Owen

7) R.C. Sheriff Journey’s End (1929) + Poetry by Siegfried Sassoon

8) Essay Completion Week

9) Mary Borden The Forbidden Zone (1929) + Poetry by T.P. Cameron Wilson and others

10) Ernest Hemingway A Farewell to Arms (1929) & selections from In Our Time (1925)

This course introduces students to different concepts and discourses of terror in romantic period literature. It concentrates mainly on the relationship between the aesthetic category of the sublime and the political climate of fear created by the Reign of Terror in France in the mid-1790s and intensified by the revolutionary wars in Europe. The course explores how ideas and perceptions of terror fed into romantic literature, and how romantic literature in turn helped to reshape notions of fear. Through reading primary texts and examining contemporary images (such as paintings, engravings, and magazine illustrations) students will develop an enhanced understanding of the connections between the romantic language of terror and other topics, including millenarianism, anti-jacobinism, spectatorship, codes of visuality, obscenity and pornography, prophecy, pantheism, materiality, subjectivity, friendship, domesticity, the Gothic, ‘atrocity,’ the body, imagination, sexuality, and liminality. The course will begin with an introductory session outlining the main themes and writers on the course, and close with a seminar addressing the relevance of notions of terror and the sublime to (post)modern culture and society.

Seminar Schedule

Week 1  Introduction: Fear and Loathing in Romantic Literature: theory, examples, introduction to main themes
Week 2  The Sublime Spectacle: Burke, Reflections on the Revolution in France (1790, excerpts) and Philosophical Inquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of the Sublime and the Beautiful (1759)

Week 11. The Postmodern Sublime
English Literature (and Divinity)
Fourth Year Semester One Option Course

Modern Religious and Ethical Debates in Contemporary Literature

Course Organiser: Dr Alison Jack (a.jack@ed.ac.uk)
The course is co-taught with Dr Mark Harris and Dr Hannah Holtschneider.

Class Contact Hours: Seminars on Thursdays 11am -1pm in New College, School of Divinity; Autonomous Learning Groups will also meet for one hour per week.

Course Summary
This course will explore the influence of contemporary religious and ethical debates on literature of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. It will consider the differences between Scottish, English and American fiction in religious and theological terms. Writers from Christian, Jewish, and atheist perspectives will be contrasted.

Learning Outcomes
On completion of the course, students should have a detailed knowledge of selected contemporary literary texts and of their interaction with modern religious and ethical issues. They should be aware of current debates in the field of literature, religion and theology. They should be able to discuss the differences in theological and literary emphasis between Scottish, English and American literature, and between Christian and Jewish writers.

Seminar Schedule

Week 1: Introduction to the Course: Aims and Objectives

Week 2: Twentieth Century Catholicism
Graham Greene, The Power and the Glory

Week 3: Religion and Literature in Scottish Culture

Neo-imperialisms

Course Organiser: Dr David Farrier

According to Michel Agier, ‘the world today is confronted with the sustained evidence of precarious lives’. This course will look at various ways in which life is made fragile and precarious by what might be called the ‘neo-imperialisms’ of the contemporary globalized world, and will include writing (novels, short stories, and poetry) and film from South Africa, Nigeria, India, Britain, the United States, Iraq and Guantanamo Bay. The emphasis will be on creative responses to oppression and marginalisation—the role of the imagination (such as constructing fantasies of ‘the other’) in propagating forms of violence, and also in marking out ‘other passages’ (in Judith Butler’s words) out of cycles of oppression and injury. In particular, the course will ask students to consider the extent to which the various positions and theories offered by postcolonial studies can provide a viable frame for thinking about representations of current or recent geopolitical situations, such as environmental stress, increased people movement, the ‘war on terror’, the power of international corporations, and the politics of development.

Seminar Schedule

Outback, Outlaws and Outcasts: Antipodean literature and (un)settlement

Course Organiser: Dr Michelle Keown

This course engages with a range of Australian and New Zealand literature and film focused upon the experiences of settler communities (including British settlers but also other ethnic groups such as Chinese and Pacific Islanders). It also investigates indigenous Australian and New Zealand literary responses to white settlement. It focuses primarily upon twentieth- and twenty-first-century ‘reimaginings’ of the colonial settler experience, but also features creative writing by nineteenth- and early twentieth-century ‘first-generation’ settlers from England, Ireland and Scotland.

The course will explore the strategies through which antipodean settlers staked a claim to their adoptive countries (including the renaming and ‘taming’ of the land/environment, and the ‘forgetting’ of the often violent acts of appropriation that displaced the indigenous peoples of these territories). We will also investigate the anxieties and sense of alienation that have persisted within settler cultures; and the prevalence of outlaws and ‘outsiders’ (such as Ned Kelly, the infamous Irish Australian bushranger; and Chinese miners during the Antipodean gold rushes of the nineteenth century) within the histories and literatures of these nations.

The course is divided into two sections, the first focused upon writing from Australia, and the second on New Zealand writing. Each section begins with a session on colonial poetry and prose, before moving on to consider a range of later works by well-known authors, poets and film-makers such as Peter Carey, Henry Lawson, David Malouf, Janette Turner Hospital, and Patrick White (Australia); and Jane Campion, Eleanor Catton, Witi Ihimaera, Katherine Mansfield, and Alison Wong (New Zealand).

Political Shakespeare

Course Outline

This course will explore the ways in which Shakespeare can be considered a political writer. Its first part will consider how a range of tragedies, history plays and comedies addressed the key debates and dilemmas that preoccupied the late-Elizabethan world. Its second part will examine the impact of the succession of James VI/I period on Shakespeare’s theatrical practice. The course will consider the nature of Shakespeare’s political thought across his career. It will also examine how this has been understood (or misunderstood) by subsequent critical interpretation.

Queering Fictions in the Twentieth Century

Course Organiser: Dr Carole Jones

This course explores the multifaceted representations of sexual identity in twentieth century fiction. It engages with the historical and social construction of homosexuality and investigates the emergence of gay, lesbian, transgender and queer identities in Western culture. We will focus on the theorising of homosexual identity from the perspectives of Freud and the sexologists of the early twentieth century, the gay and lesbian civil rights movements of the 1970s, the impact of HIV and AIDS, and the emergence of queer theory in the 1990s. In our survey of this literature we will focus on how the literary texts engage with political, sociological and philosophical ideas and discourses and so each novel will be read in parallel with key critical texts of the period.

Scottish women’s fiction in the twentieth century presents us with a field of enquiry which both parallels and challenges dominant conceptions and readings of Scottish cultural tradition. In every era women writers have foregrounded literary innovation and formal experimentation in their engagement with the social and political questions of their time and location and beyond, emphasising their special perspective on crucial issues of identity concerning nationalism, gender, sexuality and the politics of emancipation. This course will explore the development of Scottish women’s fiction from the twenties to the nineties and consider their work in relation to the literary strategies associated with realism, modernism and the Scottish Renaissance, and postmodernism. Alongside the fiction we will engage with contextualising theoretical approaches including feminism, nationalism and other perspectives informing contemporary Scottish studies.

According to some accounts, sex and God both died out in the Victorian period. Conventional understandings of the period often depict it as one plagued by sexual repression and religious doubt. Sigmund Freud theorized sexual repression, while Richard von Krafft-Ebing catalogued sexual ‘perversions’ in 1886, narrowing and defining the range of acceptable sexual practices. Friedrich Nietzsche proclaimed ‘God is dead’ in 1882, and Thomas Henry Huxley coined the word ‘agnostic’ in 1869. But these tendencies were not straightforward – prostitution and pornography thrived in the period, while religious debates often took centre stage precisely because the foundations of religious belief no longer seemed secure. Victorian poets were deeply engaged with issues of sexuality and theology and these two concerns often became connected in their poems – sometimes in uncomfortable ways. In this class we will encounter a variety of approaches to these subjects and will ask what makes those approaches specifically ‘Victorian’.

Indicative Secondary Texts

Introduction

Students taking this course will explore the ways in which Restoration literature depicts sex, desire and love. They will analyse relationships between literary texts and the political, theological and philosophical debates taking place about sexuality in Restoration culture. As well as reading a range of different types of literary text (from religious epic to sexually explicit libertine poetry; poetic encomiums on the sanctity of marriage to sensationalist narratives about debauchery and prostitution), students will also examine and assess the place of sexual imagery in contemporary philosophical and theological arguments about the nature of truth, morality, politics and the state. The aim will be to develop an understanding of the ways in which Restoration literary texts present, endorse, question or challenge the ideas and practices of the culture in which they are produced.

After the radical challenges to social order and hierarchy that occurred during the Civil Wars, the Restoration settlement sought to re-impose cohesion by means of an idea of the state as a secure family unit. At the same time, however, the period also saw the flourishing of libertine culture with its sexually explicit literature and art, much of which appeared deliberately to challenge the officially sanctioned images of family and state. Images of seduction in Restoration culture thus present not only a range of sexual behaviours but also, and particularly when linked to ideas of sedition, address political tensions and debates directly, especially with regard to the Exclusion Crisis.

Students will have the opportunity to read some of the most influential literary writing of the Restoration period (including texts by Dryden, Behn, Rochester, Milton and Vanbrugh) in the context of political theory, philosophy and conduct writing by thinkers such as Hobbes, Filmer, Allestree and Locke. They will be able to discuss these writers in relation to topics such as libertinism, conscience, national identity, marriage, sexuality, pornography, debauchery and lust.

In popular imagination, the Edwardian period is characteristically seen as a long and carefree summer season. This ‘long summer’, according to conventional readings of the era, takes place in the gap between, on one side, a time of heavy Victorian paternalism and, on the other side, a disastrous world war. Literary histories of this era have similarly depicted the Edwardians as existing in a period of transition: bordered before 1900 by decadent reactions to the end of the Victorian period and after 1910 by the stirrings of literary Modernism. For these reasons, the first decade of the twentieth century has tended to be overlooked by students of both Victorian and Twentieth Century Modernist literature. This course offers an excellent opportunity to address this lacuna by examining several key literary texts alongside a number of the important social and political themes that emerged at this time. We will, for example, study the work of writers such as Arnold Bennett, H.G. Wells, E.M. Forster, George Bernard Shaw, G.K. Chesterton, Joseph Conrad, J.M. Barrie and Rudyard Kipling. And we will examine the texts produced by these writers – many of whom produced their best work at this time - in light of important social and cultural debates: these will include Imperialism, the countryside and the Condition of England, the role of women in the new century, the rise of the lower middle class in literary culture, the effects of new technological breakthroughs at this time (the motor car, and aeroplane move from imagination to reality in this period), and those heated debates conducted between Henry James and H.G. Wells – among other protagonists – about the role of the writer in the new century.

By the end of this course students, will gain a detailed historical and theoretical understanding of this period. This knowledge will allow students of Victorian and twentieth century Modernist literature to bridge the gap between these distinct periods. The student completing this course will gain an excellent understanding of a variety of print cultural forms: these will include novels, verse, drama, children’s literature, and journalism. In addition, students interested in the intersection between literature and history will gain insights into the relationship between these disciplines over a ten year period.

Thinking Translation: a Beginner's Guide

Course Organiser: Dr Charlotte Bosseaux

Teaching staff: Dr Charlotte Bosseaux, Dr Sharon Deane-Cox, Dr Hephzibah Israel and Dr Şebnem Susam-Saraeva.

Description:
This course is an introduction to the activity of translation and the discipline of Translation Studies. It aims at giving the students an idea about what the translation profession involves, what role translations may play in a society, and which areas Translation Studies as a discipline covers. Sessions take the form of tutorials or workshops on specific genres or translation areas in order to sensitize students to the challenges of translating different type of texts.

Course structure:
11 weeks, 2 hours per week (tutorials/workshops)

Assessment:
Student performance will be assessed by one 2,500-word essay (50 per cent), a mid-term discussion paper (1,000 words, 30%), and a course participation grade (20 per cent).

Course Schedule

Week 1. Introduction to the course
The first class will be dedicated to presenting the course and starting to think critically about translation in terms of genres.
Reading: TBC (no reading or a short introduction to TS)

Week 2. Representations of translators and interpreters
The session will look into how translators and interpreters are represented, through the lens of movies. It aims at raising the students’ attention to issues surrounding faithfulness, expectations in cross-linguistic encounters, responsibilities, control, and anxieties surrounding the duplicity of translators and interpreters. Several excerpts from relevant movies will be shown and discussed.
Reading: Cronin (2009) Chapter 1

Week 3. Translating for Children: Putting Humpty together again
This session will focus on the joys and challenges of translating children’s literature. The session will explore some questions particularly challenging to the translation of children’s literature: from what is ‘children’s literature’ to the age of the target readers, the use of fantasy and elements of nonsense and poetry. The students will discuss existing translations as well as try their hand at translating short pieces.
Reading: Guix, Juan Gabriel Lopez (2006)
Week 4. Translating multilingual films

This session will explore the challenges brought about by multilingual films. Students will need to watch a film (Inglorious Basterds) and have thought about the following questions: what is the function of each language present in this film, if it was subtitled or dubbed in one language (i.e. your mother tongue or other working language) how would you cope with the presence of various languages.

Reading: Film screening Inglorious Basterds (Tarentino, 2009) & tbc one article on multilingualism.

Week 5. Translating the Four-letter Word: “Fk, is that possible?”

This session will explore the challenges of translating shifting language registers. It will focus specifically on texts that are inflected by swearing, slang or obscenity highlighting differences in regional/class registers and translating swearing from previous centuries. Students will evaluate the function of such language use in literature and compare them across the language pairs that they have. What are the challenges of translating such language use and are there any strategies that can be employed? They will also try their hand at translating short extracts of English literary texts from previous centuries that employed swearing into contemporary English and into their second language.

Reading: TBC

Tutorial Diary: how has your understanding of translation evolved since you started the course?

Week 6. Song translation

The session will focus on the different ways song lyrics may be translated under different circumstances (for dubbing, cover versions, surtitling, record inserts, etc.). The session aims at raising the students’ awareness on the different functions a translated text may fulfil and the varying requirements that go with these functions.

Reading: Franzon 2008

Week 7. Feedback session on mid-term paper & Poster presentations – In Search of Translation

The first part of the session will be looking at the feedback students received on their mid-term papers. In the second part, the students will be invited to bring examples from a variety of text types that may include translations, either overtly or covertly. These may range from newspaper articles to blogs. The presentations will focus on what gets translated, by whom, for which purposes, and how. The intended outcome is to open the students’ perceptions to the prevalence of translations in daily life.

Week 8. Workshop: Lives in Translation

This session will explore what it means to translate texts such as autobiographies, memoirs, testimonials and diaries that set out to record the lived experiences of the author. Students will be encouraged to think about questions of accuracy, representation and responsibility, especially in light of works that deal with events that are traumatic or far outside the translator’s own realm of experience. The discussion will be based on examples of translators’ paratexts that engage with these issues, and students will then be invited to consider the specific challenges they might face when translating a selected passage.

Reading: tbc
Week 9. Difficult translations

The session will focus on translating antagonistic texts. Students will be offered texts which might be challenging for them, not in terms of their linguistic difficulty or cultural otherness, but in terms of the ideologies inherent in the texts. This session will tie in discussions within translation studies surrounding ideology, gender, and ethics, among others.

Reading: TBC

Week 10. Beyond the text

This session will consider the influences exerted by other agents in the translation process and will pay particular attention to how publishers package and market translated texts. Students will have the opportunity to investigate the contributions made by editors, preface-writers, cover designers etc. and to explore the reasons behind specific paratextual decisions. Translation reviews will also be brought into the discussion in order to assess the effectiveness of certain marketing strategies.

Reading: Kershaw, Angela (2014).

Week 11. Course review & Q&A

This session aims at bringing together the issues covered during the course in preparation to submitting your 2,500 word essays.

Bibliography (all compulsory):

Aims and learning outcomes

As an introduction to Translation Studies, the course aims at encouraging the students:

- to be aware of translations they use on a daily basis
- to develop a critical attitude towards language use, the translation process and product
- to contextualise translations within wider issues, such as politics, culture, history, etc.
- to focus on the figure of the translator/interpreter as crucial mediators and gatekeepers in a society
- to promote the development and refinement of transferable skills, including the following: time and resource management; independence and self-directedness; clarity, fluency and confidence in written and oral presentation; the ability to plan and execute complex tasks independently and in groups.

Learning Outcomes:

By the end of these courses students will be expected to show the ability:

- to demonstrate a high level of expression in both written and oral presentations
- to recognise and acknowledge the complexity of the subject
- to construct coherent arguments which demonstrate an awareness of the problems and translational issues posed by the texts/ issues studied
to demonstrate a high level of expression in both written and oral presentations
- to carry out personal research on the specific topics covered under the guidance of the tutor and offer evidence of research initiative
- to demonstrate an awareness of the research potential relating to the topics covered in class (to provide examples in class, to write essays or do presentations).

Students will be expected to show adaptability and originality in their responses to different translation tasks and problems and to demonstrate the ability to carry out an in-depth study of translation related topics. In addition to the above, students will be expected to demonstrate a high level of competence in the following areas: time-management, expression, classroom interaction and group work, written and oral presentation.
Writing for the Theatre: An Introduction*

Course Organiser: Nicola McCartney

Course Schedule:

WEEK 1: Introduction. Theatre in Four Dimensions – workshop/ seminar

WEEK 2: Character and Action. “Ramallah” by David Greig, “Snuff” by Davey Anderson,

WEEK 3: From page to stage: using the sign systems of theatre – “Theatre as Sign-System” by Astona and Savona

WEEK 4: Virtual World: space and time. “Distracted” by Morna Pearson, “The Price of a Fish Supper” by Catherine Czerkawska

WEEK 5: Dialogue. “Harm” by Douglas Maxwell, “The Basement Flat” by Rona Munro

WEEK 7: WORKSHOP – 3 plays

WEEK 8: Essay Completion Week (class will not meet this week)

WEEK 9: WORKSHOP – 3 plays

WEEK 10: WORKSHOP – 3 plays

WEEK 11: WORKSHOP – 3 plays

This is a course on short play writing. All plays discussed come from Scottish Shorts, a collection of nine short plays by three generations of Scottish playwrights.

Texts & Performances:

Scottish Shorts, selected and introduced by Philip Howard, Nick Hern Books (5 Aug 2010)

NB: As students will be required to write a critical essay on a live production, they will be required to see that production preferably twice before writing about it. A list of productions which can be written about will be distributed at the start of term. Additional reading will be given for certain seminars.

Additional Reading:
Elam, Keir. The Semiotics of Theatre and Drama, Routledge (June 2002)
Shakespeare, William. The Complete Works, various editions
Sophocles, Oedipus, various editions
Carter, David. How to Write a Play (Teach Yourself Educational), Teach Yourself Books 1998

Autonomous Learning Groups: In this course, ALGs will be devoted to writing exercises. Each week, the tutor will assign a different writing exercise to be completed during the first ½ hour of each ALG session. Everyone will stop writing after ½ hour and devote the remaining time to sharing your work by reading it aloud and then discussing it in the remaining ½ hour of the session. We will then engage in a brief discussion about these sessions when we meet in class each week.

Workshop: The second half of the term will be devoted to reading aloud and giving feedback (both written and oral) to your classmates, along with writing and revising your own short play. Each student will have ONE short play (running time, 20-30 minutes) distributed to the class, read aloud and discussed in each workshop. Students must distribute their plays electronically by 5pm on Friday the week BEFORE they are slated to be discussed in class. This will give the tutor and your fellow students the time they need to give a careful, considerate reading to your work and to write appropriate comments. Any plays received after this deadline will not be read, and the student in question will then forfeit his or her workshop slot.

Upon receiving your peers’ plays electronically, students must print a hard copy of each one and read it with pen or pencil in hand, giving constructive feedback and advice in the margins where appropriate. These hard copies must then be brought to class, as they will be referred to throughout our discussion of the work. At the conclusion of each workshop, all hard copies are then returned to the writer, so that she/he may have the benefit of everyone’s feedback when undertaking revisions.

Assessment: A 2,500 word critical essay in response to a production of a recently staged play in Edinburgh (or Glasgow). Students will be directed to which plays to see at the start of the term and essay questions relating to these set forth to the class in week 3 will form 25% of the final mark. A short play of 20-30 minutes running time that has been drafted, critiqued, and revised will form 75% of the final mark.

This is a class on short play writing. As such, this final work must be a single short play— with a beginning, a middle, and an end—not a collection of scenes nor an excerpt from a full length play.

Semester One Option Course

Writing the Body Politic

Course Organiser: Dr Lee Spinks

The course will aim to examine a selection of texts exploring the reinvention of cultural identity in American poetry from Walt Whitman to the present day. Because the course encompasses such broad cultural and intellectual movements as “Transcendentalism,” “Modernism” and the “Postmodern,” issues of cultural identity and value will be examined in a context that also enable students to examine the nature and utility of these more general ideological formations. The term “body politic,” while inescapably cultural and political in its primary emphasis, is also intended to facilitate discussion of those issues of sexuality and gender that inflect cultural and political subjectivities.

SEMINAR SCHEDULE

Censorship

Course Organiser: Dr Katherine Inglis

John Milton's 'Areopagitica' (1644) describes two forms of censorship: pre-publication censorship, which Milton rejects as incompatible with English liberty; and destruction of the book after publication, which he holds compatible with English justice. This course studies the ways in which censorship, pre- and post-publication, has been enforced, resisted, and accepted from the seventeenth century to the present day. The operation of the censor is apparent in the prosecution of authors, publishers and booksellers for blasphemy, seditious, and obscenity; but censorship operates just as effectively through editorial intervention and the quiet rejection of offending texts by libraries and bookshops. We will learn about the economic, social, and legal pressures to which writers and publishers are subject, considering how the threat of censorship influences the formation, production, and reception of literature. We will read a range of texts that have provoked official and unofficial censorship, texts that articulate and challenge the position of the censor, and texts that imagine the destruction of books. Throughout the course, we will analyse censorship’s construction of a vulnerable reader, who, like Don Quixote, the hero of the first novel, becomes that which he reads.

WEEK 1 Introduction to censorship.

WEEK 12 The Vulnerable Reader 3: Children and Young Adults.
One text, chosen by students in Week 2, from the American Library Association’s list of the most frequently challenged and banned books in American public libraries. In 2011, the top ten banned books included: To Kill a Mockingbird, Brave New World, and The Hunger Games trilogy. Our focus shifts from the UK to the US not because censorship is necessarily more prevalent in US public libraries than in the UK, but because the ALA’s reporting system quantifies censorship and makes it visible.

Fourth Year Semester Two Option Course

Contemporary British Drama

Course Organiser: Simon Malpas

Introduction
This course aims to provide a clear overview of the range of contemporary British drama, and to assess this controversial but significant area critically and constructively. Since the mid-1960s, dramatists have experimented relentlessly with form and material in order to respond to changes in culture and society, as well as to confront audiences, challenging their political and ethical beliefs and expectations. A central focus of the course will, therefore, be to investigate the different ways in which contemporary drama has explored the range of possibilities inherent in the medium of live theatre.

The course will cover a broad spectrum of work by living dramatists, from the major plays of established writers from the second half of the twentieth century such as Harold Pinter, Edward Bond and Caryl Churchill, to work by playwrights of the twenty-first century including David Greig and Gregory Burke. The approach will be informed at all times by contemporary critical and theoretical thinking, and will also include some investigation of contemporary theatre practice, including new ideas about staging and new techniques of acting. Students will thus be encouraged to explore practically issues of staging and performance, as well as to think theoretically about questions of representation, style and politics.

Please note: in order to understand the ways in which a play’s use of theatrical conventions are central to the communication of meaning in performance, some time in class will be devoted to getting up and acting parts of the texts studied. Students won’t be marked on their acting ability, but getting involved will be necessary.

Primary Texts:
(Each of these should be purchased and read in advance of the relevant seminar.)
Howard Barker, Plays One, London: Oberon, 2006
Edward Bond, Saved, London: Methuen, 2000

Creative Writing Part I: Poetry*

Course Organiser: Dr Alan Gillis

If we trace the etymological root of the word ‘poem’ we find its meaning to be a ‘thing made or created’. To be a poet is thus to be ‘a maker’. The aim of this course is to take a practical, hands-on approach to the making of poems. Each week we will discuss and explore differing components of poetic form, and of the crucial techniques involved in poetic composition, while students will also be asked to compose their own poems throughout the course. Weekly classes will effectively be split into two. The first hour will involve seminar discussion of formal techniques and ideas. For this, students will be given, via LEARN, a selection of poems to read as well as some critical writing that relates to each week’s theme. The second hour will be a workshop in which students, on a rotating basis, will be required to read their work-in-progress to class. ALGs will form a second, smaller workshop in which students participate weekly. As such, the giving and receiving of constructive feedback to and from peers is central to the course, and full participation in workshop and ALG discussion is essential. Emphasis will be placed on the personal development of each individual, but, to aid this, students will be encouraged to write new verse that reflects each week’s theme, if possible. All in all, the course is designed to provide a constructive and encouraging arena in which students can hone and improve their poetic skill, while gaining perspectives on the art form that will complement their literary study more broadly. It should be noted that the course involves formal assessment based on a portfolio of each student’s own poems.

Creative Writing Part II: Prose *

Course Organiser: Dr Allyson Stack

Overview
In this course, students will explore the structures, techniques, and methodologies of fiction writing through both analytical and creative practice. Focusing specifically on the art and craft of the short story, students will examine a wide range of stories, learning to analyse works from a writer’s perspective. Discussions will emphasize unpacking the functional elements of selected works (character, setting, point-of-view, narrative voice, dialogue, scene versus narrative, plot, and so on) with the aim of learning strategies for evaluating, writing, and revising their own short stories. Weekly creative exercises and workshop sessions will complement and enhance these discussions. Students will also draft, edit and revise their own short stories, while also critiquing and offering constructive feedback on the work of their peers.

Approach
Students will spend the first half of the course analyzing published stories and exploring these techniques and practices through weekly creative exercises in which they will be expected to put these techniques and strategies into practice. The second half of the course will be devoted to workshop sessions in which students read, analyze, and critique short stories drafted by their peers, bringing the strategies and analytic vocabulary developed in the opening half of the course to bear on one another’s short stories, while also using them to guide their own creative process as they draft and revise their own short fiction.

Weekly Schedule:

WEEK 1: Introduction. Details that Work: George Saunders’s ‘Sticks’. Reading as a Writer. Ron Carlson’s ‘Down the Green River.’

WEEK 2: Character and Setting. Ian McEwan’s ‘First Love, Last Rites’; V. S. Pritchett’s ‘The Saint’; Octavio Paz’s ‘My Life with the Wave’ (hand-out); T. C. Boyle’s ‘Greasy Lake.’

WEEK 3: Point-of-View and Narrative Voice. Margaret Atwood’s ‘Hair Jewelry’; David Foster Wallace’s ‘Girl with Curious Hair’ (hand-out); Eudora Welty’s ‘No Place for You, My Love’; Flannery O’Connor’s ‘The Artificial Nigger’.

WEEK 5: Plot. Yukio Mishima’s ‘Patriotism’; Italo Calvino’s ‘The Distance of the Moon’ (hand-out); and Cormac McCarthy’s All the Pretty Horses.

WEEK 6: Innovative Learning Week (class will not meet this week)

WEEK 7: WORKSHOP—3 stories

WEEK 8: WORKSHOP—3 stories

WEEK 9: Essay Completion Week (class will not meet this week)

WEEK 10: WORKSHOP—3 stories

WEEK 11: WORKSHOP—3 stories

WEEK 12: WORKSHOP—3 stories

The above-listed readings are all drawn from The Art of the Tale, unless otherwise indicated. Supplementary readings will also be assigned as appropriate.

Assessment: A 2,500 word craft analysis essay will form 25% of the final mark. A portfolio consisting of 1) three writing exercises that have been typed up and revised; 2) a 750 word cover letter discussing your revision process in detail; and 3) a 3,000 to 4,000 word short story that has been drafted, critiqued in workshop, and revised will form 75% of the final mark.
Digital Humanities for Literary Study

Course organiser: Dr Anouk Lang

Please note this is a 3 hour class

Digital Humanities is a field of study in which scholarly applications of technology are used to perform analyses and generate insights that would be difficult or impossible to achieve without the help of technology. This course will introduce you to a range of digital tools that will assist you both in your studies and their lives beyond university, and will help you to use these tools in a critical way.

The approach taken to DH in this course is grounded in literature, linguistics and book history. We will examine computer-mediated communication, and will consider the development of digital texts in the light of earlier technologies such as the printing press. We will focus on two kinds of approaches that are particularly prominent within digital literary studies – computational text analysis and digital mapping – and we will explore, and critique, examples of projects which use these tools. The hands-on nature of the course is such that students will have the opportunity to learn how to use these applications for themselves, and will need to devote time each week to participating in the class’s virtual community through regular, informative contributions on social media platforms. As the main assessment for the course, students will produce a digital project which conforms to the same high standards of scholarly rigour as an assessed essay, but which is attentive to the specific imperatives of the online environment in relation to genre, design and format.

Seminar schedule

Week 1 What is Digital Humanities? Introduction to the field
Week 2 Computational tools for text analysis 1
Week 3 Computational tools for text analysis 2
Week 4 Computer-mediated communication
Week 5 Versioning plus oral presentations
Week 6 Innovative Learning Week – no class ***
Week 7 Historicizing textual technologies 1: Production
Week 8 Historicizing textual technologies 2: Reception
Week 9 Essay completion week – no class ***
Week 10 Geospatial technologies 1
Week 11 Geospatial technologies 2
Week 12 Scholarship in the digital age: Data, privacy, presence

Primary text

There is only one primary text for the course, and it will change from year to year (as new texts are constantly becoming available in digitised, and sometimes marked-up, format). Once the primary text for the course has been chosen, students will be informed in good time. This text will be made available in digitised format and will be then used as the ‘raw material’ with which to explore the various methodologies and tools used on the course. Because there is only one primary text, however, students are asked to note that they are expected to read a correspondingly larger amount of secondary reading throughout the term.
Required secondary reading

Assessment

There are three assessments for the course:

1. Oral presentation: delivered in class (20%)
2. Class participation: contributions to class blog, map posts, class twitter stream etc (30%)
3. Digital project: Collaboratively built website (50%)
Fairy Tales *

Course Organiser: Dr Sarah Dunnigan

'Fairy Tales seek to remake the world in the image of desire' (Marina Warner).

Fairy tales are ubiquitously and powerfully part of traditional cultures; for most of us, a rich part of our childhood with their capacity to enchant, inspire, and provoke fear whilst, in the last five years particularly, they have had a vibrant resurgence in contemporary literature, film, and media. This course traces a particular series of moments in fairytale literary history in European and British cultures, drawing on examples from what has become the classical fairy tale canon (eg. ‘Beauty and the Beast’, ‘Snow White’; ‘Cinderella’ ‘Little Red Riding Hood’), its emergence and development in Britain in the nineteenth century (eg. in the hands of writers such as Christina Rossetti, George MacDonald, Oscar Wilde, and others) as well as later reimaginings and revisions in prose, poetry, and film (eg. the work of Angela Carter, Neil Gaiman, Guillermo del Toro in Pan’s Labyrinth, Sara Maitland, and others).

In tracing the evolution of the literary fairy tale from the early sixteenth to the twenty-first centuries, the course offers a broad historical and cultural survey of this rich and diverse form and will both introduce and re-acquaint you with some of the most famous fairy tale collectors and creators, such as the Grimms and Andersen, as well as those texts and writers which sit less familiarly within the tradition.

Provisional Seminar schedule
[please note: students will also be notified by email of the selected primary readings from the anthologies; if possible, please read ahead since there are many tales, albeit quite short, to be covered!]

Week 1. Introduction

Week 2. Early Modern Fairy Tales I (readings from the Italian tradition - Straparola and Basile; selected from Zipes, ed., The Great Fairy Tale Tradition).

Week 4. Romantic Fairy Tales I: the Brothers Grimm (selected tales from Crick ed.)

George Orwell and the Politics of Literature

Course Organiser: Dr Anna Vaninskaya

George Orwell is one of the most famous writers of the twentieth century, and terms such as ‘Orwellian’, ‘Big Brother’, and ‘1984’ have entered the language. But Orwell was more than the author of Animal Farm and Nineteen Eighty-Four: he dedicated his life to making political writing into an art, and he bore witness to many of the definitive political events and movements of the first half of the century. He also expanded the boundaries of a variety of genres: the realist novel, the documentary and the travelogue, satire and dystopia, the essay and the allegorical fable. Through his work we can gain an unparalleled insight into the cultural debates of the 1930s and 40s; and in this course we will focus on the relationship between text and context in order to build up a comprehensive picture of a period shaped by the Great Depression, communism, fascism, and wars that defined the modern world. We will also consider the formal and theoretical issues involved in bringing politics into literature, and question what it means to talk of the ‘politics of literature’ more generally.

Modern and Contemporary Scottish Poetry *

Course Organiser: Dr Alan Gillis

In this course, we will proceed through close readings of key poems by each week’s chosen poets, examining, through these readings, the emerging aesthetics of Scottish poetry. Modern and contemporary Scottish verse is notable for its enormous linguistic range and virtuosity. This abundant vernacular energy is matched by great variety in terms of style, mode, and voice. From neat-and-tidy formal compactness to sprawling experimentalism; from yearning lyricism to mordant satire; from uncompromising naturalism to dream-songs, fables and fantasies; from impassioned searches for authenticity to bawdy carnivalesques … students will be encouraged to experience and enjoy the many-voiced contradictions and diversity of Scottish poetry, but also to discover and explore interconnections and parallels between differing styles, viewpoints and tendencies. As recurring themes are seen to evolve: involving the relationship of poetry to place, to gender, and to class; and as recurring tensions and arguments are explored: involving the relationship between poetry, nationality, regionalism and individuality; between poetic tradition, experimentation, and politics … students will develop their skill in connecting close readings and analyses of style and form to such wider contexts. Students will be encouraged to develop and follow their own interests, and will be asked to give frequent short class presentations.

Modernism: Text, Image, Object

Course Organiser: Dr Simon Cooke

This course explores major works of Anglo-American literary modernism in relation to the advanced visual art of the period (including painting, collage, sculpture, photography, and installation). By approaching modernist novels and poems in this way, the course aims to: clarify students’ understanding of the ways in which such texts challenge nineteenth-century conventions of meaning and representation; highlight the close connections that existed between literature and the visual arts, and between Britain, the United States, and continental Europe, during the modernist period; foreground the visual impact of typographic design in key modernist texts and the conjunction of text and image in celebrated modernist artworks; think through the idea of the ‘avant-garde’ and examine the distinctive features of the major avant-garde movements; and draw attention to the importance of the manifesto as a key point of contact between modernist literature and art, and an important genre in its own right. Each week, we will examine a particular modernist cultural movement via selected writings and artworks, with the emphasis on making comparisons with artistic forms in order to deepen our understanding of literary style, technique, and theme. In addition, we will take advantage of our location and make a class visit to the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art, which has exceptionally strong holdings of Dada and Surrealist art, as well as work by Picasso, Braque, Warhol, Lichtenstein, and Paolozzi.

Schedule
(Selected works by the artists listed below will be available to view via LEARN)

WEEK 1  Introduction to the course

WEEK 2  Impressionism and Post-Impressionism
Writing: Virginia Woolf, To the Lighthouse (1927) and extract from ‘Modern Fiction’ (1919); Joseph Conrad, preface to The Nigger of the ‘Narcissus’ (1897)

Compulsory Purchase Texts

In addition to the primary texts listed below, all students should purchase a copy of Vassiliki Kolocrotoni, Jane Goldman, and Olga Taxidou, eds., Modernism: An Anthology of Sources and Documents (Edinburgh University Press, 1998). This volume contains all of the manifestos and critical writings listed in the schedule (except those for the final two weeks, which will be available via Learn), as well as a wealth of other helpful materials.

Djuna Barnes, Nightwood (Faber and Faber, 2007)
Langston Hughes, Selected Poems (Serpent’s Tale, 1999)
Peter Jones, ed., Imagist Poetry (Penguin Modern Classics, 2001)
Mina Loy, The Lost Lunar Baedeker (Carcanet, 1997)

Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course, students will be able to:
- understand the key ways in which literature interacted with the visual arts during the modernist period
- articulate the distinctive characteristics of the major modernist cultural movements
- compare and contrast the ways in which literature and visual art make meaning
- analyse the formal and thematic elements of major examples of literary modernism in relation to works of visual art

Postmodernism: Who Needs it?

Course Organiser: Professor Randall Stevenson

The course will examine and evaluate issues raised by recent theory and discussion of postmodernism, questioning how, and how successfully, this theory serves literature in the latter half of the C20th, and what relevance it - or the literature concerned - retains in the 21st century. Literary examples will be taken from 'postmodernist' fiction, discussion centring on the texts listed below (draft only). Several of these are substantial novels, or sets of novels. Along with theoretical essays from volumes mentioned below, this makes it a very demanding course in terms of reading. It would be worth getting ahead with this reading before the course starts. You might either get going on the longer items (The Golden Notebook, Midnight's Children and the Beckett Trilogy all qualifying for that category) or just start reading from the top of the list: texts for weekly seminars will probably follow the order below.

Seminar Schedule (provisional)

Week 1 Introduction. What is/was Postmodernism?

Week 2 Flann O'Brien, At Swim-Two Birds

Week 3 Samuel Beckett, The Trilogy

Week 4 John Fowles, The French Lieutenant's Woman

Week 5 John Berger, G

Week 6 INNOVATIVE LEARNING WEEK

Week 7 Alasdair Gray, Lanark

Week 8 Doris Lessing, The Golden Notebook

Week 9 ESSAY COMPLETION WEEK

Week 10 Jeanette Winterson, Sexing the Cherry

Week 11 Gabriel García Márquez, One Hundred Years of Solitude

Week 12 Salman Rushdie, Midnight's Children

Primary texts (provisional)

Flann O'Brien, At Swim-Two Birds (1939)
John Berger, G (1972)
Alasdair Gray, Lanark (1981)
Gabriel García Márquez, One Hundred Years of Solitude (1967)
Jeanette Winterson, Sexing the Cherry (1989)
Further reading, including background and theoretical, will be suggested during the course, the latter largely taken from Thomas Docherty, ed., Postmodernism: A Reader (Hemel Hempstead: Harvester Wheatsheaf, 1993) and from Joseph Natoli & Linda Hutcheon, eds. A Postmodern Reader (NY: Suny, 1996). Brian McHale, Postmodernist Fiction (London: Routledge, 1987) offers a clear and particular introduction to some of the issues involved.
Shakespeare Adapted

Course Organiser: Dr Dermot Cavanagh

Why adapt Shakespeare? This course will explore how Shakespeare’s plays have been appropriated and reimagined by a range of modern and postmodern writers and filmmakers. The cultural prestige enjoyed by Shakespeare’s works has long inspired other artists to re-interpret their concerns. This course will analyse the motives involved in reshaping and rewriting these works. It will consider the ways in which contemporary texts ‘talk back’ to Shakespeare’s plays by addressing perceived gaps or silences, by adopting the viewpoint of marginal characters, or by extending their implications in alternative temporal or cultural circumstances. The course will also examine recent theoretical approaches to adaptation and appropriation.

Teaching Schedule

Week 1 Introduction: Adaptation and Appropriation
Reading: Walter Benjamin, ‘The Work of Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction’

Secondary Reading:

Shakespearean Sexualities

Course Organiser: Dr Suzanne Trill

This course will explore the construction of sexuality within Shakespearean texts, with reference to modern theoretical approaches to the study of literature, including feminist and queer theory. It will examine the way in which gender roles were conceptualised during the Renaissance (that is, what did it mean to be 'masculine' or 'feminine'), but will focus on the expression, or repression, of sexual desire. This will involve students in examining heterosexual, homosexual and homosocial relationships and, indeed, to explore the relevance of these categories to Shakespearean texts. Students will also be asked to consider how issues of race and/or nationality intersect with the construction of gender and sexuality.

Seminar Schedule

1. Introduction:
2. The Two Gentlemen of Verona, and The Taming of the Shrew
3. The Merchant of Venice
4. The Merry Wives of Windsor

Writing and Tyranny at the Court of Henry VIII

Course Organiser: Professor Greg Walker

The course will study the writings of a period when politics and literature were intimately and powerfully connected. The dramatic and bloody events of the reign of Henry VIII are, thanks to frequent television adaptations, films and works of popular history, well known to many of us. But the equally extraordinary literary works produced and performed at and around the royal court in this period are less frequently studied. This course will focus on those works: poems, plays and prose writings, ranging from erotic lyrics to savage satirical attacks on the king and his ministers, from lightly comic plays to fierce polemical dramas. All of these texts are both powerful works in their own right and also contributions to political debates about the nature of royal power, religious truth or personal and sexual morality. And many of the writers we shall encounter, from the staunchly catholic Sir Thomas More to the fiercely protestant reformer John Bale, from the satirist John Skelton to the humourist John Heywood are equally fascinating.

The emphasis will be on gaining an understanding of how these writers and their texts both responded to and contributed to the political culture of the reign of Henry VIII. Reading literary texts alongside a variety of visual images and historical documents, we will explore how poets, dramatists and prose writers used their work to explore the moral issues and social tensions exposed by Henry VIII’s rejection of his first wife, Katherine of Aragon, his break with the papacy and establishment of the Royal Supremacy, and the growth of what many perceived to be the king’s tyrannical domination of the realm. We will explore how many of the forms and modes of writing that would form the staple repertoire of English literature in the age of Shakespeare were actually forged out of the fierce struggles to promote or resist royal power in the court of King Henry.

Suggestions for Background Reading

Historical Studies

The historical literature on the reign of Henry VIII is voluminous. The following are a selection of the works that cover the central events, personalities and issues of the period. All of these are relevant and worth reading, but those marked with an * are especially so.

- G.W. Bernard, The King’s Reformation (2005) (a powerful and very detailed study that argues that Henry VIII was the mastermind behind the reformation)
- Susan Brigden, London and the Reformation (1989) (a good, and very detailed account of the impact of reform on the capital)
- Dickens, A.G., The English Reformation (2nd edition, 1989) (the classic account of the Reformation from the Protestant perspective) *
- Eamon Duffy, The Stripping of the Altars; Traditional Religion in England, 1400-1580 (1992) (a powerful reappraisal of the vitality of traditional catholicism in the period from the catholic perspective) *
- G.R Elton, Reform and Renewal; Thomas Cromwell and the Common Weal (Cambridge: CUP, 1973) *
- S.J. Gunn and P.G. Lindley, eds., Cardinal Wolsey: Church, State and Art (1991)
- Peter J. Gwyn, The King’s Cardinal: The Rise and Fall of Thomas Wolsey (1990) (a huge and very detailed defence of Wolsey as a statesman and churchman)
- E.W. Ives, Anne Boleyn (1986)
- Lehmberg, Stanford E., The Reformation Parliament, 1529-36 (1973) (a useful narrative of events in the stormy parliament that enacted the Henrician Reformation)
- J.J. Scarisbrick, The Reformation and The English People (Oxford, Oxford University Press, 1984);
- Lacey Baldwin Smith, Henry VIII: The Mask of Royalty (1971) (good on Henry’s tyranny) *
- David Starkey, The Reign of Henry VIII: Personae and Politics (1985) (a textbook that looks at the reign through the prism of court faction and intrigue) *
- Lucy Wooding, Henry VIII (Routledge, 2008)

‘Original Sources’
Those interested in getting a flavour of the original documents (letters, proclamations, Acts of Parliament, contemporary chronicles, etc) on which historians base their accounts, might like to brose in the following:

• Edward Hall, The Union of the Two Noble and Illustrious Houses of Lancaster and York, ed., H. Ellis (London, 1809)
• Hughes, Paul L., and James F. Larkin, eds., Tudor Royal Proclamations: Volume 1, The Early Tudors, 1485-1553 (New Haven: Yale UP, 1964)
• State Papers Published Under the Authority of His Majesty’s Commission, King Henry VIII, Public Record Office (11 vols, London, 1830-52)
• R Brown, et al, eds., Calendar of State Papers Venetian, (9 vols, 1864-98)

Finally, a huge number of colour illustrations of Henrician artefacts, manuscripts and printed books, along with brief, informative accounts of the major events of the reign are available in the catalogue of the recent 500th anniversary exhibition held in the British Library:

Writing Contemporary Femininities: Experiments in Waywardness *

Course Organiser: Dr Carole Jones

The current climate is replete with contradictory ideas, images and interpellations of women and femininity, with vaunted social freedoms existing amidst prominent reporting of sexism and misogyny across cultural contexts and communities. Making sense of this situation after 50 years of feminism is a fraught task, with competing analyses accounting for the persistence of traditional paradigms of gender identities and relations alongside innovative social, personal and sexual liberations which characterise contemporary life. This course addresses how the pressing confusions informing feminine social being are critically engaged and challenged by literary and filmic representations from the recent period. Therefore, it explores what can be characterised as a women’s genre of disaffection in contemporary fictions.

'Writing Contemporary Femininities' investigates representations which challenge existing modes and ideals of femininity in a diverse range of contemporary texts. The aim is to question and further understanding of current cultural formations and discourses of the feminine in these texts in order to explore how they reproduce or resist traditional ideals, constrict or promote liberation, limit or expand ideas of the human. In this the course is informed by the notion of waywardness – behaviour that is difficult to control or predict, prone to the seemingly perverse – in its questioning of the potential of the feminine for troubling power and imagining life otherwise. We will focus on a deliberately wide variety of texts, from the popular (the chick-lit of Bridget Jones’s Diary) to the radically experimental avant garde (Kathy Acker and Chris Kraus), some of whom deploy a purposefully provocative, obscuring and violent style.

In considering current representations of women, particularly in the Scottish context, the course foregrounds questions of form, genre, the significance of representational strategies and style, the relation between fiction and reality, and cultural value. However, it also necessarily engages with critical discourses, particularly postfeminism and its contradictory and ambivalent emanations in cultural critique. Therefore, the primary texts will be read alongside critical theory which addresses the idea of the feminine – psychoanalysis, difference feminism, the work of Judith Butler – and which engages the social, cultural and political context, particularly the work of cultural theorists such as Angela McRobbie and Rosalind Gill, and critiques of postfeminism as a neoliberal discourse. In this the course aims to provide a stimulating snapshot of current gender debates and confusions, and of the character of their interrogation in representations over the recent period.

Fourth Year Semester Two Option Course

Victorian and Edwardian City

Course Organiser: Dr Jonathan Wild

During the nineteenth century, Britain changed from an overwhelmingly rural society to a predominantly urban one. This course examines the ways in which writers attempted to come to terms with often bewilderingly rapid changes in urban life and landscape. Our investigations will trace how the modern city shaped contemporary texts and also how readers’ ideas of the modern city were in turn shaped by those texts. Although the course is divided into five discrete sections, these are intended to overlap in a way that allows us to form more general conclusions about modernity and the city in Britain. Apart from the core texts, we will also examine contextual and theoretical material relevant to this topic.

The aim of this course is to provide students with a detailed understanding of the importance of the city, both physically and imaginatively in Victorian literature.

By the end of the course the student will gain an insight into key themes in Victorian literature: these will include representations of modernity in Victorian writing, social-problem fiction, the gothic, Degeneration and fin de siècle texts, and the New Woman novel.

The course will also provide essential critical/theoretical background knowledge for students wishing to focus their studies on the Victorian period and beyond.
