Adhered by hand, these shawl designs have no attributed creator or date. It seems as if they have been cut by hand and arranged by both design and size. There are two sets of inscriptions, both as a form of identification on the page. These pieces are also stamped with the Trustees for Manufacturers of Scotland stamp that was commonly put on linens in the 1800’s.

The Zoology of the Voyage of H.M.S. Beagle. Pt. 3: Birds, pl.34
Darwin.71
Laura Beattie

The bird specimens from Darwin’s second voyage of H.M.S Beagle were given to John Gould, a renowned published ornithologist, to identify. Gould’s identification of separate species was to be pivotal in Darwin’s inception of his theory of evolution by natural selection. Gould’s illustrations were often produced by his wife, Elizabeth Gould, from his sketches.

Tracey McShane

Mark Catesby (1682-1749) was an English naturalist who compiled the first comprehensive survey of the flora and fauna of south-eastern North America (then part of the British colonies). The Natural History of Carolina, Florida, and the Bahama Islands: Containing the Figures of Birds, Beasts, Fishes, Serpents, Insects, and Plants..., published between 1729 and 1747, consisted of 220 hand-coloured illustrations with accompanying descriptions. This etching is of a Magnolia blossom, with leaves and seed pod.

The University of Edinburgh is a charitable body, registered in Scotland, with registration number SC005336.
The University of Edinburgh as well as having great students and staff, has great stuff. Since its very beginnings, the University has collected books, art, archives, manuscripts, musical instruments and objects to inspire its community in learning, teaching and research.

One of the world’s great collections has been built up over hundreds of years and constantly surprises those who come to view and enjoy the items.

The illustrations in this book are inspired by items and images within the collections and were collated by students during the Festival of Creative Learning Week 2019, and by staff in the Information Services Group.

We hope you enjoy and become curious to find out more.

To be inspired further by the collections and to
