Frequently asked questions
Deaf Education Postgraduate Diploma / MEd

1. Is full time study possible?
Moray House also offers a full time MSc in Inclusive Education which teachers may want to investigate, but this will not qualify them to teach deaf children. It allows students to explore the concept of Inclusion at Masters level working alongside other postgraduate students who have an interest or experience teaching children with a range of disabilities. For more information in the MSc, email the programme director, Rachel O’Neill: Rachel.oneill@ed.ac.uk
Students on this full-time MSc course can take Deaf Education courses and do a dissertation on a Deaf Education topic.

2. Who is eligible to apply?
It is impossible to provide a definitive answer about individual eligibility without viewing the completed application form, but the following requirements should be considered as a guide.

Teachers should hold a first degree, and we prefer students with a First or Upper Second Class Honours or equivalent, although teaching experience is also taken into consideration.

Applicants should already be qualified teachers. For Scottish school teachers this means registration with the General Teaching Council for Scotland and for others in the UK their Teacher Reference Number.

Potential students must also satisfy an English Language requirement of Higher English C or above, GCSE English C or above, IELTS score 7.0 with 6.5 in writing. For further details and equivalents see: http://bit.ly/1Gsrff0

Deaf and hearing students are welcome on this course. Deaf students can apply for Disabled Students’ Allowance which will pay for the access arrangements they prefer, for example electronic notetaker, BSL / English interpreter. Assignments can be completed in BSL. We recommend early contact is made with Disability Services: http://bit.ly/14iCSSs

Teachers should be currently working with deaf children in a school or college for at least two days a week. This can be voluntary work, but there must be a range of experiences with different deaf learners.

Applicants will need to have internet access either at home or school / college, preferably broadband. Most of the course materials are available online.
3. Can teachers on this course get any help with fees?
Most students have their fees paid for by their employers.

You may be able to apply for a scholarship or bursary. See this University of Edinburgh webpage for more information. Put into the search engine: postgraduate taught, your nationality and Education to see the scholarships you may be able to apply for.
http://www.scholarships.ed.ac.uk/awards/

When you have matriculated, or fully enrolled, the university also has a hardship fund to which you can apply:
http://www.scholarships.ed.ac.uk/financial/hardship/index.htm

If an applicant has graduated from the University of Edinburgh in the past, there is a 10% reduction in course fees.

4. How is the second teaching placement organised?
If for example if the teacher currently teaches in a peripatetic role, the second period of teaching placement may be in a school with a resource base or in a deaf school. We ask employers to release teachers for the second teaching placement; it may be possible to arrange swaps between students on the course. In some cases this will mean services for deaf children will have to organise cover a long time in advance, so we will arrange the external placement early on in the programme.

5. Can teachers continue to get a Masters in Education?
Yes. If teachers gain 50% or above for all courses and don't need to resubmit at any stage then they will be eligible to continue to the M.Ed. The additional fees during 2015/16 for moving from a Postgraduate Diploma to a Masters are £3,150.

This includes:
Research Methods: Conceptualising Research (10 cr.) £450. January start Research Method: Planning Research (10 cr.) £450. March start.
Dissertation (50 cr.) £2,250. April start

Students will be supervised by the programme organiser to research and write the dissertation. Please contact Rachel O’Neill, the programme organiser, to discuss possible subjects for research. Supervisions can take place by Skype to suit the student. These courses can take 2 years or can be completed in the period January to August if the student is available full-time.
Here are topics which have recently been researched in relation to deaf learners at the School of Education, University of Edinburgh:

- The Achievements of Deaf Pupils in Scotland
- Transition of young deaf people after leaving school
- English language modification and deaf learners
- Subject specific vocabulary in BSL
- Signed digital exam papers
- Acoustics, listening and comprehension skills in class
- Possibility of research or study visits to colleagues in Sweden, Greece and the USA because of close collaborative links with other universities.

There is a research culture at the University of Edinburgh about Deaf Studies issues. Teachers can, for example, join and lead regular seminars and lectures provided by EdSign:

https://sites.google.com/site/edsignlectures/

6. Is learning British Sign Language (BSL) part of the programme?
We expect teachers to achieve at least Level 1 in British Sign Language by the end of the programme in their own time. This can be with Signature, SQA or the Institute of BSL curriculum. Teachers will need to give in a copy of the highest level of BSL certificate they have before the end of the programme. If they are working with deaf children who use sign, they will need to plan how they can reach Signature BSL Level 3 or equivalent, which is really the minimum needed to teach effectively in the language. However, this is not part of the programme as it may take them several years to reach this level.

Students can join the Sign Language Society, a society of Edinburgh University Students’ Association, to achieve low cost BSL tuition.
http://www.eusa.ed.ac.uk/societies/society/signsoc/

If you are unclear where you can go to learn BSL, please contact the programme co-ordinator. There is now good provision across Scotland for learning BSL to level 6 and beyond to interpreting skills.
7. Can teachers study this course from home by distance learning?

All programme materials are available in advance on Learn, the University of Edinburgh’s virtual learning environment. This means that students can access all the key reading from their computer. Access to broadband is essential to view online lectures.

One course, Collaborative Working, is currently available either face to face or by live streaming online. Another course, Sources of Knowledge, is available as an entirely online course requiring no attendance at Moray House. These courses are starred (*) on the first page of this guide.

In recent years we have experimented with offering individual courses taught at Moray House by distance-learning which has been very successful. If your authority would like to negotiate this with us, please do. It will involve your local authority posting in a video card we will return to you after each block of 2 or 3 days. So teachers studying in this way can complete the learning activities entirely outside their normal teaching timetable, provided the authority and student agree.

We hope this improved flexibility will mean that teachers from more remote parts of Scotland and the UK can attend the course on a fair basis. Tutorials will be available after each block by phone or Skype to check that the student is following everything.

However, there are many advantages of studying at least some courses all together: the friendships and contacts that students make with other course members provide a very important future professional network for teachers of deaf children.

8. Does the Postgraduate Diploma in Deaf Education cover the competences in the Scottish Executive guidelines for teachers of deaf children?

Yes. All the courses in the Moray House programme are mapped onto these competences. Here is the web address of the Scottish Government competences for specialist teachers in the area of sensory impairment:

http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2007/01/29163203/0

The Postgraduate Diploma in Deaf Education at Moray House has more detailed learning objectives which match those used by other universities in the UK to qualify teachers of deaf pupils, i.e. the English National College for Teaching and Leadership Standards for the Mandatory Qualification.

Please contact the programme director if you would like to see the mapping of the Scottish Government competences to the outcomes for the Postgraduate Diploma in Deaf Education or the English Competencies.
9. Can I apply for accreditation of prior learning?
Yes, there are two ways for teachers to do this. If you have completed a course at another university which has very similar learning outcomes, then you can apply for Accreditation of Certificated Prior Learning (ACPL) which is free. However, it can only be counted for APL if it has been completed in the last 5 years and you have not used it to gain another certificate or diploma. This means in practice that ACPL doesn’t happen very often. Students sometimes apply to do the Collaborative Working course by ACPL as similar courses are offered at the Universities of Aberdeen and Strathclyde; they then do a 5 credit top-up assignment based on working together in deaf education and achieve the course by accreditation of certificated prior learning.

If a student has experience and can show they can achieve the outcomes for a course another way, they can apply for Accreditation of Prior Experiential Learning, which is £80 per course. This means they will submit evidence of their experience and training and do the course assignment.

10. Why does the application website say the Diploma takes 4 years?
This is the maximum time allowed. Teachers usually complete in two or three years but some teachers may need additional time. On the application website please apply for the PG Diploma in 4 years and in your application form say if you intend to complete in 2 or 3 years.

11. How can I find out about dates and times of courses offered in 2015/16?
On this weblink. Also the following year’s dates and times will be on the same page from April each academic year.

http://bit.ly/19i6vAV

The Sources of Knowledge course is online for 5 weeks from mid September each year.
12. Can you recommend some cheap accommodation in Edinburgh?

Here is information about university accommodation which may be fairly cheap - all nearby to the School of Education:

http://www.edinburghfirst.co.uk/for-accommodation-internal/
