Why study International Relations?

- Due to globalisation, we live in a hyper-complex and highly interdependent world
 - The study of IR is central to understanding these complexities & interdependencies
- How do states co-operate with one another?
 - And how/why do they succeed/fail? → War & Peace
- Why do states engage with international organisations (EU, IMF, WTO, WB, UN, ICC, etc.) to solve collective actions problems?
 - Climate change; terrorism; trade relations; development/growth; inequality; human rights, etc.)

Why study International Relations?

Highly interdisciplinary

- IR → politics, economic, law, history, psychology, anthropology, philosophy, media studies, etc.

IR graduates learn key transferable skills:

- Deploy theoretical lens and empirical evidence to make persuasive arguments
- Build specialist in-depth knowledge of specific areas and issues in IR
- Evaluate, create, analyse, and interpret data

Career opportunities

- Regional, national and international government institutions
- Party political support
- Educational, research and think-tank organisations
- Development organisations
- Media & journalism
- Commercial organisations
- Lobbying

A colorful, stylized map of Edinburgh, Scotland, showing the city's layout, major roads, and landmarks. The map is oriented with the Firth of Forth at the top. Key features include: the South Queensferry and Queensferry Road crossing the Firth; the River Forth flowing through the city; major roads like George Street, Princes Street, and the A1; and various landmarks such as the Royal Palace, the Scottish Parliament, the Edinburgh Castle, and the Arthur's Seat. The map also shows the surrounding areas of Portobello, Gogarburn, and the Pentlands.
