Summary of Research Interests

My research is mainly focused on the impact of childhood experiences on adult functioning. A key focus is applying an attachment framework to the understanding of individual differences in self-regulation of emotion, thought and attention, to understand how these impact on wellbeing and mental health. Previous projects, including PhD projects have applied an attachment framework to the following areas: individual differences in dispositional mindfulness, individual differences in trait anger and aggressive behaviour, coping with terminal conditions such as brain tumour and enduring conditions such as psychosis, or psychosis symptoms such as paranoia.

A second focus is on the impact of Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACES) on self-regulation, behaviour and mental health. Projects here have focused on the relationship between trauma and abuse (particularly emotional abuse) and mental health; investigating attitudes towards trauma informed practices in the police and schools and evaluation of trauma awareness interventions. nd relationships on mental health and wellbeing outcomes in later life. I have a particular focus on how these early experiences contribute to attachment representations and self-regulatory capacities that are linked to vulnerability towards mental health issues. My research therefore includes: attachment; adverse childhood experiences; emotion regulation; dispositional mindfulness; psychosis.
